Das PhotoforumPasquArt zeigt ab 19. April 2015 vier Künstler, die die Fotografie als Ermittlungs-instrument im Dienste der Erzählung verstehen. Unter Zuhilfenahme der subtilen Alchimie, die das fotografische Dokument ermöglicht, entwerfen Yann Laubscher, Regine Petersen, Aleix Plademunt und Jonathan Roessel Erzählungen, die über das blosse Darstellen von simplen Fakten hinausgehen.

(c) In seiner nächsten Ausstellung, die ab dem 19. April 2015 zu sehen sein wird, zeigt das PhotoforumPasquArt vier Künstler, deren visuelle Strategien darauf abzielen, vergangene Ereignisse und fiktive Geschichten heraufzubeschwören. Die Erzählungen werden aus einer Sammlung von Bildern, die Archivdokumente und aktuelle Bilder enthält, frei konstruiert und ziehen den Betrachter hinein in ein Spiel von Assoziationen und komplexen Beziehungen.

Der Wolf als Metapher

M38 ist die Bezeichnung für den ersten Wolf, der letztes Jahr die Schweiz durchquert hat. Angezogen vom Wesen dieses oft nur schwer fassbaren Tieres hat sich Yann Laubscher (*1986, Lausanne) auf aussergewöhnliche Art und Weise an dessen Fersen geheftet. Er liess sich leiten vom Medienecho, das das Tier hervorrief, und folgte so der geographischen Spur des Wolfs, die ihn in Kontakt brachte mit Örtlichkeiten, Landschaften und Personen. Seine Arbeit zeichnet für uns die Erfahrungen nach, die er dabei gemacht hat.

Die beschaulichen und machmal melancholisch gefärbten Bilder von Yann Laubscher geben einer fast mystischen Faszination für die Natur Ausdruck. In einer nüchternen Handschrift, die das Erlebte umsetzt, versuchen die Bilder den Schleier, der über der Wildheit liegt, zu lüften und hinterfragen deren Stellung und Wert in einer praktisch vollständig gezähmten Umgebung. Über die Metapher des Wolfes verweist Laubscher den Betrachter seiner Bilder aber auch zurück an die in ihm selbst schlummernde Wildheit.

Meteoriten als Zeitkapseln

Seit mehreren Jahren baut die Künstlerin Regine Petersen (*1976, D-Hamburg) ein Werk auf rund um ihre Faszination für Meteoriten, die sie als Zeitkapseln und emotionale Objekte versteht. In der Arbeit «Find a Fallen Star» verwendet die Künstlerin Geschichten, die von Meteoriteneinschlägen berichten, als Ausgangspunkt für eine erzählerische Arbeit, die mehrere Verständnisebenen umfasst. Das im PhotoforumPasquArt gezeigte, erste Kapitel, «Stars Fell on Alabama», erzählt die Geschichte eines Meteoriteneinschlags vom 30. September 1954 in Sylacauga, Alabama und dessen Folgen für das Haus von Ann Elisabeth Hodges nach.

Regine Petersen versammelt Presseausschnitte aus jener Zeit, Zeugenaussagen und Originalinterviews, in Archiven oder zufällig aufgefundene Bilder sowie ihre eigenen Dokumentarbilder. Sie verwandelt den Vorfall in eine breit angelegte und passionierte Nachsuche, die einen Blick auf einen besonderen Ort und eine besondere Zeit wirft und so unterschiedliche Themenkreise wie Sterblichkeit, Religion, die Rassenfrage oder den Kolonialismus anreisst. Mit diesem Ansatz, der die dem Medium Fotografie innewohnenden Qualitäten nutzt, konstruiert sie eine komplexe Erzählung, in der sie Wissenschaft und Kunst kombiniert und darüber hinaus der Beziehung zwischen Vergangenheit und Zukunft und zwischen Realität und Fiktion nachgeht.

Die Distanz als Spiel

Der katalanische Fotograf Aleix Plademunt (*1980, E-Girona) bezeichnet sich selbst als jemanden, der unermüdlich nach Bildern sucht und um die Ecke denken kann, was es ihm erlaubt, Objekte, Orte und Momente mit- und untereinander zu verbinden. Seine Arbeit mit dem Titel «Almost There» hat seinen Ursprung in einer Postkarte von 1909, die von einem gewissen John an eine gewisse Essie gerichtet war. Der Text auf der Postkarte lautet: «Lieber Freund, ich bin auf dem Weg in den Süden». Im unteren Teil der Karte ist ein Stempel zu sehen, der besagt, dass die Postkarte nie bei der Adressatin angekommen ist.

Der Künstler nutzt diese Entdeckung dazu, eine plastische Untersuchung des Begriffs «Distanz» zu initiieren, sei diese nun zeitlich, physisch oder emotional. In seiner Arbeit, in der die narrative Kohärenz bewusst unterlaufen wird, legt er den Akzent auf sich überkreuzende Beziehungen zwischen speziellen Situationen und Objekten, die auf den ersten Blick völlig fremd anmuten. Er spielt dabei mit Veränderungen auf der Zeitebene. Bilder von der entfernten Galaxie Andromeda oder prähistorische Knochen werden herangerückt an das, was dem Künstler selbst am nächsten liegt: die Vergrösserung der eigenen, roten Blutkörperchen. «Almost There» hinterfragt die Standarddefinitionen von Zeit, Distanz und Raum.

Ein Gelehrter als Sujet

Mit der Arbeit «Dernière sortie» zeichnet Jonathan Roessel (*1989, Renens) die Geschichte von Philippe Morel nach, einem renommierten Archäozoologen, der 1999 bei einem Unfall im Rahmen einer Höhlenforschung im Steinbockloch im Berner Oberland verscholl. Ausgehend von persönlichen Archiven des Neuenburger Wissenschaftlers rekonstruiert der Künstler die vielfältigen und abenteuerlichen Reisen dieser aussergewöhnlichen Persönlichkeit, die insbesondere als herausragender Fachmann für die Erforschung von Knochen und als Vertreter einer experimentellen Archäologie bekannt war.

Durch die Vermischung von Archivdokumenten, Auszügen aus Notizbüchern und Originalfotos von Expeditionen mit zeitgenössischen Dokumentarfotos kreiert Roessel eine poetische und erzählerische Rekonstruktion des Lebens dieses unermüdlichen Forschers. Indem er mit den Grenzen des konzeptuellen Ansatzes und der «Dokumentation des Nachhers» spielt, schafft es der Künstler, die Fakten aus der Vergangenheit feinfühlig in der Gegenwart zum Leben zu erwecken und ihnen zusätzlich eine symbolische Kraft zu verleihen.

M38

« M38 - c'est son nom - n'est pas venu du Jura français tout proche, mais bien de l'extrême orientale de la Suisse. Il a visiblement parcouru à pas de loup toute la Suisse romande. Avant de grimper à la vallée de Joux. Il faut savoir qu'il est un grand marcheur ».

Ce travail porte sur des préoccupations liées au monde sauvage et à la notion de parcours. J'aborde la figure du loup comme créature fugitive et insaisissable, celle-ci rassemblant finalement tout un bestiaire. Quelle est la véritable nature sauvage de ces animaux ? Leurs noms - par exemple M38 - et les textes associés aux images y répondent de façon éloquente.

J'ai une idée et une approche photographique assez impersonnelle portée sur les traces (ou l'absence de traces) plutôt que sur les faits. Les apparitions médiatiques de ces animaux créent un tracé métaphorique que j'aborde comme un sentier géographique à suivre. Les paysages sont des clichés mélancoliques, étranges et à la lisière des choses, ils doivent ouvrir à une compréhension plus large du sauvage et de l'inapprivoisé. Le travail à la chambre et au moyen format me permettent un vocabulaire visuel simple, élémentaire et rigide. Il me force à travailler lentement et à tenter de traduire quelque chose qui est ressenti plutôt que perçu. Proche d'une quête initiatique, je pars également à la recherche de personnages dont la part de mystère et de sauvagerie qui demeure au plus profond d'eux demeurent également impénétrable.

Stars Fell on Alabama

« Stars Fell on Alabama » is the first chapter in Regine Petersen's series on meteorites, titled „Find a Fallen Star“. It is a configuration of archive press cuttings, eye witness reports, interview transcripts, genealogy and found images, fleshed out with quiet, contemplative photographs taken in the field. She began the project in 2009, having chanced on the story of the Hodges meteorite. What began as an investigation into a single stone, though, has branched into a lightning rod touching memory, history, magic and mortality; human relationships and religion; race, slavery and colonialism. It also considers the practice of storytelling itself - whether an author/photographer can tell a story without casting their own shadow over its content.

Meteorites are pieces of asteroid, leftovers from the formation of the solar system 4.5 billion years ago. They are highly prized by scientists, who find in their solid, iron and stone mass clues to the infant universe. Of the several thousand that make the fiery plunge to earth each year, most are lost in the sea. Others become cosmic dust and disperse, but each year a great number make contact with the ground. Most fall without consequence. Most that is, not all.

On 30 September 1954, an eight pound meteorite fell on a house in Sylacauga, Alabama. It crashed through the roof, bounced off a console radio and hit 31 year old Ann Elizabeth Hodges on the hip while she was napping on her sofa. A photograph from the time included in Petersen's anthology shows the woman with two policemen. Her brow is furrowed, her hands nervous, and no wonder. As well as extensive bruising, the incident brought a Special Forces investigation to her door, a flurry of media attention, a bidding war, a lawsuit, divorce, betrayal and a breakdown. This is the event on which Petersen's project pivots, although as we shall see, its remit is much wider.

The rock, still boasting the tar it picked up en route through the roof, now resides in the Alabama Museum of Natural History, where Petersen travelled as part of her research. The curator removed it from the glass case. „He said, you can touch it, you can take it in your hands“ and I knew he was looking at me and I thought, I have to feel something now, I have to connect to the history of things, and it was just impossible. Later though, when I photographed it, it was quite different,“ Petersen explains. Petersen has compiled eyewitness accounts from the time, detailing bright flashes and fireballs, smoke, television interference and bicycle accidents. In Phenix City a woman thought it was a flying saucer: she „saw a man get out of it.“ The disparity that exists between these reports is something that came to fascinate her. „People misremember. It all starts with an idealised story that sounds a little bit like a fairy-tale and then you go below the surface and it gets more and more complicated.“

She also includes the transcript of an interview with Ann Elizabeth's husband, conducted in 2005. Eugene Hulitt Hodges was out when the rock hit his white-frame house, and returned to find some 200 reporters on the scene. He spent months fighting his landlady in court after she sued for possession. Collectors lost interest, so he used it as a doorstop for a while, then Ann Elizabeth donated it to the museum, against his wishes. They divorced a few years later, both citing the meteorite as primary cause.

Petersen photographed the muddy earth of the impact site. She drove to Talladega forest, the local junkyard, defunct marble quarries. Sylacauga is known as „Marble City“ and huge chunks lie everywhere in the dust. „I liked the idea of the two coming together; the black rock from space and the marble from the earth,“ she says. Strange things began to happen. On the day she visited the ceme-

try to find Eugene's gave (he had died two weeks before she came to Alabama) men were assembling his gravestone. When she visited an old slave plantation a dog with one blue eye and one brown came out of nowhere and sat in front of her. „The photographs I took are like apparitions. It felt as if everything just came towards me of its own accord.“

The day following the Hodges incident, a 60 year old farm hand named Julius McKinney discovered a second fragment of the meteorite in the middle of a dirt road. His mule shied away from it, and in the dark he thought it was a snake and left it alone. It wasn't until he heard about Ann Elizabeth Hodges that he retrieved it, but because he was black, and this was Alabama, and the Civil Rights Act was still a decade away, he hid the rock under his bed, frightened he wouldn't be allowed to keep it. Several months later he told his postman, the only 'official' person he knew. He arranged for McKinney to meet a geologist, who in turn helped arrange a sale to the Smithsonian. The money furnished McKinney with enough to buy a farm and a car outright.

Petersen includes cuttings from the Ironwood Daily Globe, and Avondale Sun, the last including a photograph of the McKinney family, with the "black-coloured pearl". She also includes a photograph of the original negative, retouched crudely by the newspaper with white paint to cover the extreme poverty the McKinney's lived in. In 1954 Alabama, people liked their reality watered down.

Also included are accounts from an 1833 meteor shower large enough to be visible all over America, including Alabama. "I'm interested in these layers of history," says Petersen. Prophet Joseph Smith recalls „the long trains of light... like serpents writhing... it seemed as if the artillery and fireworks of eternity were set in motion to enchant and entertain the Saints, and terrify and awe the sinners of the earth." A slave recalls her masters „tellin' some of the slaves who their mothers and fathers was, and who they'd been sold to and where... they thought it was Judgement Day."

It is the way in which Petersen's work swings gently between religion, science and superstition that provides the golden thread binding it together. Her own magical thinking for example, or Julius McKinney believing „the Lord gave [the meteorite] to me" and a postcard sent to Ann Elizabeth Hodges from a church in Bellevue, Kentucky pleading for the rock. Inserted between Petersen's photographs of anthills and cotton plants and discarded snapshots in the dirt are scientific images of planetary bodies far away in the night sky, as she switches ably back and forth between microcosm and macrocosm. The fragility of human life in the face of the cosmos lurches into view.

Next, Petersen will travel to India, where a meteorite was witnessed to fall by two nomads in the desert of Rajasthan. She has already completed the second chapter of her work in a town in Westphalia, Germany where five children found a meteorite in the 1950s. Petersen has no idea how far the project will take her. One thing is certain, she has rich pickings ahead. It's impossible not to be fascinated by these stories, which contain as much rich detail about human fallibility as the rocks contain about the beginning of the universe.

Almost There

On 26 January 1909, John sent Miss Essie a postcard saying he was on his way south. She never got the postcard, but 101 years later I happened to be the one to receive this message. This apparently banal, chance event intrigued me and gave fresh impetus to a work I'd started some months earlier. Spurred on by John's postcard to Essie Turner, the Almost There project got under way with a series of photographs which, rather like a prelude, raised the issue of the journey as a piece of personal research and the impossibility of arriving at the set destination. Frustration.

Travelling in general and travelling to far-flung places in particular have formed part of my photographic work since my very first projects. But for the first time I realised that what I was desperately seeking outside might actually lie inside.

This was my initial approach for undertaking a strange, new exploration that was very different to my previous ones, a journey inwards and outwards to see things up close and from afar. This venture brought me no true or specific answers, but it did make me think about the concept of travelling and distance and everything in between.

As a result, the project began by presenting different images showing different places at radically far-away physical distances.

Almost There also explores the question of physical distance in this constant quest to photograph the impossible, namely the emotional proximity that ties us to extremely far-off places— in both space and time — ie places we've never been or to which we can never return.

My need to always search far and wide for what I felt I couldn't find close by was linked to my interest in the classic American documentary tradition, geographically far removed from my own origins. In Almost There , this historical and, you might say, even genealogical dimension has taken on an even greater presence, basically as a result of my interest in visualising the inherent dichotomy in the concept of the landscape between image and territory, ie representing a known territory not so much by physical or measureable signs of identity, but by visual references — in this case photographic — that have played a leading role in the history of the medium.

These classic references, almost intrinsic to the representation of American territory, are suggested and revealed when the distance in interpreting these very distinctive styles becomes so fine that I find myself photographing the same place where some of these creators had been twenty and thirty years ago. The key question here is not the rephotography or tribute, but once again a strategy for revealing this concept of distance.

And then I come close and photograph what I have nearby, where I have fewest photographic references, but inevitably most emotional ties. I photograph the place where I come from and the place I was born and make them hold a dialogue with the landscapes of my photographic imagination, which are geographically much further away, but which I've made form part of my personal imagination. I get on a plane to look down from on high and then I return here, close by. Really close by, to bring together different kinds of distances, spaces in the cracks in which to defy the conventions of logic; and I photograph what I have closest to me, my father, and I discover there isn't just a time distance between us, but also an emotional one as well. And then I leave again, to search far, far away, to seek out the greatest distance. And I find myself looking at the largest known star (VY Canis Majoris) from an observatory in my own country, blurring once again this idea of a single distance. And when I photograph it, I realise I am photographing a star that might no longer exist, because the light I see has taken millions of years to reach me. A light photon is created in the nucleus of the Sun and takes millions of years to reach the surface. This tiny portion of light travels from the surface of the Sun to the Earth in 8.5 minutes. So I want to photograph the place I was born with an 8.5-minute exposure, so that the photon that left the surface of the Sun at the exact moment I pressed the button has enough time to hit the photographic film and in a certain way leave a trace of its journey.

And that's Almost There . A constant return journey. Exploring what I have closest to me and furthest away and how these ideas are interchanged almost without being aware of it. My blood, my country, the country of my most direct references, the places furthest away, the places where I've lived, the places I've felt my own, the universe, the largest planet in the solar system, the nearest galaxy, chance. The impossibility of reaching one's destination, photographing the photograph. Photography as an imaginary return journey and at the same time as a reflection of that place and that thing we can never go back to, which we can never see again in the same way. Almost There , in short, explores the genres and languages we use to try and understand the world through images, but it also examines how photography conditions our visions, as well as the intrinsic mystery of each place: being there, getting there, seeing it from afar or observing it up close.

This confrontation between interchangeable distances can only deliver a letdown: I'll never be far enough away or close enough. But in the space between these two distances, in the play of perceptions created between them, things happen, things I decide to explore. Almost far, almost near. Almost There.

Dernière sortie

La dernière journée de Philippe Morel fut consacrée à l'étude et au relevé minutieux de squelettes de bouquetins lors de l'exploration de la grotte de Steinbockloch, dans l'Oberland Bernois, en compagnie de deux spéléologues.

Il était captivé par l'histoire naturelle, la préhistoire et l'archéologie. Tout ce qui était en rapport avec l'os éveillait sa curiosité de même que tout ce qui d'une manière générale, avait trait au monde animal. Tout jeune, il s'était en effet attaché à constituer une collection ostéologique de référence. Au terme de vingt ans de recherches assidues, sa collection comprend la presque totalité des vertébrés de la faune centre-européenne.

En 1991, à l'occasion de l'examen des vestiges osseux de la grotte du Bichon (NE), petite cavité fouillée en 1956 par deux spéléologues et qui avait livré les squelettes entremêlés d'un homme et d'un ours, mélangés à quelques armatures lithiques, Philippe Morel fait la découverte d'un fragment de silex fiché dans l'une des vertèbres de l'ours.

L'archéologie expérimentale, en particulier les techniques de boucherie et d'étude des traces d'impact laissées sur les os par les projectiles, était un autre domaine qui lui était cher.

Depuis 1993, il collaborait également à la mission archéologique des Universités de Bâle et de Damas à El Kown, en Syrie, pour laquelle il assurait une étude sur des sites paléolithiques anciens.

J'ai souhaité retranscrire cette histoire en m'intéressant de plus près à Philippe Morel. C'est dans ses propres archives personnelles, conservées au Laboratoire archéozoologique de Neuchâtel, que j'ai pu commencer mes recherches et ainsi définir les différents chapitres qui me semblait pertinents pour illustrer cette histoire.

Je me suis laissé embarquer dans les pérégrinations multiples et aventureuses de mon personnage. J'ai choisi d'utiliser la force symbolique des images comme témoin visuel et original de l'existence de cet homme.

Cette approche joue entre les frontières de la photographie conceptuelle et celle du 'documentaire de l'après'. Une démarche ouverte et souple qui mélange documents d'archives, ré-appropriation d'images, de textes et autant de pistes et d'éléments qui intéragissent entre elles afin d'établir une reconstitution poétique et narrative de sa vie d'inlassable chercheur. Ainsi je souhaite réactiver au présent cette réalité passée.
